

Campus Scavenger Hunt

1. This residence hall has a revolving restaurant on its top floor.
2. This building is home to the history and political science departments
3. The restaurant near the two Humanities buildings is a great spot to grab a coffee, sandwich, or acai bowl.
4. Cross over the Pickens Street bridge and find the building that is home to the Sociology department.
5. Get a picture of Cocky!
6. This building houses the University bookstore, campus mail, and several dining options.
7. Just outside the Russell House (I can't tell you where!), there is a spot on the walkway where the sidewalk runs into a circle of paver stones. If you stand in the middle of that circle and clap, you'll hear a loud squeak. This area is known as the Clapping Circle. Give it a try and then take a picture in any direction from the center of the circle.
8. This facility provides comprehensive physical and mental health services.
9. Get a picture of Richard T. Greener, who joined the University as its first African-American professor in 1873.
10. The main University library may look like a two-story building from the outside, but there are five additional floors below the ground. Stand in front of the library and get a picture of the reflection pond.
11. This facility used by the Department of Theatre and Dance was a morgue during the Civil War.
12. Snap a picture of Williams-Brice Stadium from Sumter Street.
13. Biology, Chemistry, Geological Sciences, Marine Science, and Pharmacy can all be found in these three buildings that are connected to form one large complex. Get a picture of any of the three science buildings from any vantage point.
14. Get a picture of the horse statue in front of the College of Education.
15. This building adjacent to the Horseshoe used to be the Arnold School of Public Health and is now home to the School of Journalism and Mass Communications

Bonus!

These are worth five extra points each. Put on some comfortable shoes and explore campus.
